No, the test administration certificate provides you with the opportunity to only administer tests. In order to provide candidates with feedback of the results, further training needs to be undertaken. Feedback to candidates needs to be very carefully considered as it is one of the most important aspects of testing for the candidate. Furthermore, the feedback session gives the user an opportunity to corroborate the test results with behavioral evidence. This is a wasted opportunity if not done competently.

In order to learn from the best in the field and have practise in interpreting the tests, you will need to attend the psychometric assessment at work course. This intensive course provides you with the knowledge and skills to interpret and provide feedback on a range of ability, aptitude and personality questionnaires. The opportunity to apply for an international qualification from the British Psychological Society will also be provided.
